2025 Global Survey on AI and Human Development:
About respondents

The survey sample is evenly split by gender. Most respondents (74%) are aged 18–59. In education, about one in three finished secondary school, one in four completed only primary education or less, and one in five attained a university degree. In terms of occupation, just over two in five are currently in the workforce, while smaller shares are retired or still studying. Among those employed, a modest portion work in service or sales, though over half did not specify their job type.[1]

[1] Based on pooled data for 21 countries. All the results are weighted.

[2] Occupation groups were regrouped into broader categories. Responses indicating active engagement in the labor market—specifically "A Full-time employee [30 hours a week or more]," "A Part time employee [less than 30 hours a week]," and "Self-employed"—were combined under Workforce. "Retired/pensioned" was categorized as Retired, and "Student" retained its original label. The remaining responses—"Unemployed," "Homemaker not otherwise employed," and "Other [specify]"—were grouped under Non-workforce, reflecting respondents not currently engaged in paid employment or formal study.

[3] Detailed employment group was grouped into five broader categories: Professional and Administrative (including higher-level, technical, and clerical roles), Technical and Manual Trades (skilled and semi-skilled manual work), Service and Sales (service and commercial roles), Agriculture and Farming (farm managers and laborers), and Labor and Support Roles (unskilled workers and any responses marked as "Other").
